

Junior Kindergarten

Children learn by being actively involved in their world. The NWT Integrated Junior Kindergarten/ Kindergarten Curriculum is child-centred and play-based. This allows children to be actively involved in the learning process and helps them construct a deeper understanding of the world around them.

At YK1 we believe play is the essence of the program. Through play, children learn to take appropriate risks and accept challenges, while interacting with the environment and other students in a safe and respectful manner.

We believe that Junior Kindergarten programs should nourish the physical, intellectual, emotional, and social growth of young children.

We encourage the development of self-awareness and believe children should be treated with respect and also be encouraged to respect the rights of others.

We believe our school programming is enriched by the contributions of individual children and families and we look forward to sharing and communicating with families throughout the school year.

We believe parents are the primary influence on their children's lives. We will make every effort to be sensitive to the beliefs and cultures of the families we serve.

Nestled in neighborhoods throughout the community, you're sure to find a YK1 school close to home!

Development

Physical:

Physical development involves both the growth of a child's body and the ability to use it. Through physical activities, crafts and games children work on their gross and fine motor skills.

Intellectual:

Activities that promote the child's ability to think and problem solve.

Emotional:

Emotional development is the child's ability to learn from his/her experiences, express his/her feelings and develop empathy for others.

Social:

Activities that promote social development and awareness that teaches them to get along with others.

Cultural:

Cultural development programming reflects the cultural diversity of the children in the program, as well as the world around them.

Working Together

Parents and teachers work together to promote the growth and development of the child through open communication.
